He had left his seat in the outer row of desks and taken his stand midway on the Democratic side in the front row, with Harris of Tennessee on one side and Wallace of Pennsylvania on to itself. Which shall prevail depends on the other. An open volume of the Congressional Record lay on the desk before him. Edmunds had risen, and stood with one hand resting on the President's desk, his tall form towering above the exhausted clerks at the desk below. With great de- and their blood, and they are likely to be liberation he said: "In the judgment of the Chair the Senator from Mississippi is out of

Senate. "The yeas and nays!" exclaimed a halfdozen Democratic senators. "The yeas and mays are demanded; is there a second?" quietly said Edmunds.

Up went a score of hands on the Democratic side.

"The yeas and nays are ordered; the Clerk will call the roll," continued Edwas called, and by a large majority the decision of the Chair was reversed. With great suavity of manner Edmunds turned his face toward Lamar, and said: "The Senate decides that the Senator from Mississippi is in order. He will proceed." There was a faint effort at applause in the galleries; but Lamar threw up his hands deprecatingly, and the President's gavel came down with a quick, sharp sound, and perfect stillness reigned. With an effort at self-restraint, and slowly and deliberately, Lamar began again. [From the New York Times.] The Conflict of Races.

Those who are most learned in the history and diversities of the human race are not agreed on the question of its origin, and the The very language in common use in reference to mankind is indicative of the uncertainty that prevails on the subject. We speak of the human race as one, and of the races of men as several; and we use the phrase human species when we are not certain whether it is a species or a number of species. But whether we owe our existence to a common ancestry, whose progeny, under the di-verse influences of climate and local surbranches, with distinct characteristics, or belong to several species that have been separate from the start, and mutually repellant to any tendency toward combination, there can be no doubt of the existence now of strong race antipathies, which lead to conflict wherever estranged brotherhoods of the human family come in contact. There is a milder repulsion among the subordinate branches of the same race, and the one prolific source of quarrel among nations is their dislike of each other.

The great race conflict has raged from the beginning of history, and shows no tendency to decline. Enlightened men may rise above its prejudices and its bitterness, and see no reason why there should not be a federation of the world, a brotherhood of man, in which all should mingle freely ac-

But the mass will not mingle, and thus fur when races come together they fight. One seems determined to drive the others off, or destroy them, or bring them into subjection power and resources and the advantage of position. Whether this is inevitable and is to be eternal time alone can show, and here ment of the world. The hostility to the the pretext put forward. Industry and strength and resources. It is indolence and from Mississippi will suspend, as he is out wasteful vices that beget loss and tend toward ruin. The competition of numbers does not differ in effect, whether part be of one race or another, for every man is striving for all he can get. But the Chinese have been plundered and abused because they are hated for the offence of their origin driven from the continent, or kept from it, because the Caucasian race will have none of them. The difference of feeling on the subject is due to difference of circumstances. Human nature is the same on both sides of the continent, and if the Mongolians had come from the East the race conflict begotten by their presence would have > been on the Atlantic coast. Why have the Indians receded before the face of the white man but because neither would accept the other as of the same brotherhood and reither would submit to the other? The Indians had no organized civilization, and could not drive back the invaders from Europe. They had to give way; and if ever the vast tracts of the western wilderness are occupied by white men, the aborigines will probably fade into greed and cruelty of a century ago brought the African bere as a slave. For no other position would he ever have been welcomed. His state was one of subjection the most complete, and the unnatural relation produced its own peculiar troubles and penalties. It was changed by the action of that part of the country which was substantially free from the presence of an alien race. Had it not been so free it would never have made the contest for putting the races on an equality. Left to adjust their own relations on the same soil, will they remain on an equality? It is an uncompleted experiment, and if it succeeds the result will mark a new era in the experience of mankind, and show that the race conflict is not interminable. But the old animus of the "superior race" is still plainly observable. It does not accept peets still to make the African a subject race, to be used and led or driven to serve the ends of the more powerful. If there is not continued conflict it is likely to be because the weak race will not resist, but meekly accept the place assigned it, that of subjection, which is one of the accomplished results of the perennial struggle. So it is the world over. Wherever civilized Europeans put their foot on the soil of other races it is to begin a conflict which, if successful for them, must result in driving out, exterminating, or subjugating the na tive population. There is no question that Chinese labor is a source of absolute profit and advantage in Australia, but there the race conflict is opening as the number of Mongolians begins to look formi stant, as though for a reply, he prothe conflict of races by which the natives are driven back or brought into subjection. MANCHESTER FREE BRIDGE TO BE CLOSED. The Free-Bridge Commissioners give notice in the Dispatch this morning that on and after the 15th instant the bridge will be closed to all except foot-passengers, owing to the failure of the cities of Richmond and Manchester to furnish the means to maintain it in proper order. The commissioners are now in debt about $500, and if the cities of Richmond and Manchester and the county of Chesterfield were to appropriate the amount they have already indicated-$800it would be entirely insufficient to put the bridge in repair. THE ASSAULT UPON CAPTAIN WILKINSON. Daniel Beach, William Wormley alias Tratue, Tim. Sullivan, and James Mallory, were before the Police Court yesterday morning charged with assaulting and attempting to cut Captain W. C.
